A wide variety of interconnect devices are known, for example, printed circuit boards, flexible cables, backplanes, flexible tapes and the like.

Interconnect devices may include a connector or mating connection adapted for connection to a corresponding mating device (which may also be referred to as a mating connector) via an assembly process, such as an “interconnect assembly”. An interconnect assembly may provide a connection between two or more components (which may be referred to as an “interconnectable component” or “part”) such that the components can be connected to one another. For example, an interconnect assembly may provide a connection between an electronic device and a cable, such as between a cell phone and a cable, or between a computer and a cable, which enables the electronic device to receive (or acquire) and/or transmit data over the cable. There are a number of different types of interconnect assemblies. One type of interconnect assembly is generally referred to as a “plug-type” interconnect assembly. In a plug-type interconnect assembly, the connector or mating connection, i.e., the first connector of the interconnect assembly, may include a mating feature that mates with a corresponding mating feature (or features) of the mating device, and then a separate tether is used to connect the mating feature of the first (i.e., plug) connector to the mating feature of the mating device. Various types of plug-type interconnect assemblies are described, for example, in commonly-owned U.S. Pat. Nos. 5,715,153, 6,292,227, 6,457,912, 6,629,052, 6,631,699, 6,664,967 and 6,719,532, the entire contents of each of which is hereby incorporated by reference. As interconnect assemblies are used in an increasingly wide variety of applications, there is a need for interconnect assemblies that are suitable for use in challenging environments. For example, in some applications, water damage is a significant concern for interconnect assemblies. For example, some interconnect assemblies (such as interconnect assemblies that are capable of being submerged in a liquid, such as an ocean) are required to support a predetermined liquid pressure. Over the years, a variety of approaches have been used for making plug-type interconnect assemblies that are suitable for use in challenging environments. For example, in some plug-type interconnect

(AP Photo/Jacquelyn Martin) WASHINGTON (AP) — President Donald Trump sought to cast his immigration meeting with Congress on Monday as a last chance to avert a government shutdown in 11 days, while the White House said there is “significant progress” toward a spending agreement with Democrats. Trump and lawmakers will meet Tuesday for a negotiating session that administration officials and congressional aides expect will produce a plan for border security. Vice President Mike Pence plans to fly to Capitol Hill for a two-hour meeting with lawmakers, including House Speaker Nancy Pelosi and Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer.

ADVERTISEMENT Trump told reporters after the White House meeting with more than a dozen lawmakers to discuss immigration policy that he “wasn’t thrilled” with their attendance at the Monday session. He said there was “a lot of great people” in the meeting, despite “somebody that I’m not really thrilled about.” “The Democrats have a position that hasn’t changed, and that’s no border security,” he said. The White House said Monday that talks would be led by Pence and Homeland Security Secretary Kirstjen Nielsen, who was attending her first immigration negotiation session as part of the administration.
